

Advertorial

Humber's Business School Part-time Studies

Helping Leap Your Career Forward

Humber's part-time studies at The Business School are designed to give you choices. Take courses for general interest or to stay on top of the latest technologies. Pursue a certificate or diploma. Take a class or study online through distance education. However you structure your continuing education at The Business School at Humber, there are options open to you.

The Business School offers courses within a variety of programs: accounting studies, business and management studies, law, marketing, office administration, and the business of fashion and cosmetics. Within each of these programs, there is a broad range of courses you can take to learn a new skill or upgrade existing ones.

For example, in the accounting studies program, courses are offered toward several certificates: accounting, advanced accounting, advanced bookkeeping, financial planner (CIFP), computerized accounting clerk, IT accounting and degree completion, and bookkeeping. As well, the school offers its new certificate in International Development Management Studies – eight courses in niche areas that are given in workshop format.

Humber offers a variety of courses through distance education, courses you can take online at your own pace. These can be taken at home, work or in Humber's Open Learning Centre. Distance education courses offer the flexibility of time and place for those students who are comfortable working independently. Support is available from professors and fellow students via e-mail, phone, fax and chat rooms.

There are also plenty of workshops, from cosmetics workshops for working beauty professionals to International Development Institute workshops on topics as diverse as Humanitarian Logistics and Food Aid Management, to Canadian Human Resource Planners review workshops and student connections workshops that focus on technological skills.

To learn more about part-time studies at The Business School, visit the website at <http://business.humber.ca/continuing-education/continuinged.shtml>. And discover how you can leap your career forward.